Blueberry Cake with Almond and Cinnamon

Serves 8

Nonstick spray, for the pan
1 cup almond flour
1/2 cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 1/2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
1/4 cup (1 1/2 sticks) unsalted butter,
at room temperature
1/2 cup light brown sugar
1/4 cup plus 3 tablespoons granulated sugar
2 large eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 cups blueberries

DO AHEAD: The cake can be baked 4 days ahead, wrapped tightly in plastic wrap, and stored at room temperature.

Whenever I have a muffin, my first thought is generally, "Why aren't muffins better?" Butter, sugar, eggs, flour—I mean, by all accounts, it should be at least an 8/10 every time. And yet I find myself wishing that most were even a tenth as good as the ones from Costco that I grew up eating, which we all know are just cakes baked in muffin cups. After giving it a lot of thought, I realized that instead of making a muffin that just tastes like cake, what I wanted was a cake that tasted like a muffin. So here it is, basically one giant muffin top, now in sliceable cake form.

You'll notice that after baking it's a bit more shallow than a classic cake, but since it's so rich (thanks, almond flour!), the portion size remains the same. Another added bonus from fatty nut flour is that this cake stays fresh as the day it was baked for a few days, even if you forget to wrap it tightly every time you sneak a bite, which is my signature move.

I prefer the tinier late-summer blueberries for this because they tend to be juicier and tangier (and cuter). Use whatever you can find, because even an okay blueberry, when baked, is pretty spectacular blueberry.

- 1 Preheat the oven to 375°F. Spray a 9-inch fluted tart cake pan with nonstick spray.
- 2 Whisk together the almond flour, all-purpose flour, baking powder, cinnamon, and salt in a medium bowl.
- 3 Using an electric mixer, in a medium bowl, beat the sugar, and 1/4 cup of the granulated sugar together on medium speed until the mixture is super light and fluffy.
- 4 Scrape down the sides of the bowl and whisk in the eggs one at a time, beating until each is fully incorporated, followed by the vanilla. Increase the speed to high and beat until the mixture is pale and nearly doubled in volume, 5 minutes. Fold in the almond mixture. Gently add 1 1/2 cups of the blueberries and fold them in; don't totally smush them.
- 5 Transfer the batter to the prepared pan, using a spatula or the back of a spoon, smooth the top, and scatter the remaining blueberries and 3 tablespoons granulated sugar over the top until the cake is deeply golden brown, 30 to 35 minutes. It should be slightly underdone (that's what you're looking for).
- 6 Remove from the oven and

Food photography is everywhere these days! We have great tips for capturing mouth-watering images that will really stand out.

GRAB A PRIME LENS: Whether you shoot Nikon, Canon, Sony or anything in between, a solid prime lens will help you capture sharp, beautiful images. A 50mm lens with a wide aperture, to help with low light, is a solid place to start and can be easier on the wallet too. A Canon 50mm f/1.8 (pictured) starts at just $125.

TAKE A TRIPOD: Stability and precision are key in food photography. A good tripod will help to avoid blurry images and provide a unique image composition.

LIGHT IT UP: Let's be honest, while low lighting in restaurants provides a nice ambiance when dining, it can make capturing bright, sharp images tricky. Having even a small lighting set-up will help to create the mood you want and bring out the beauty and detail of your subject. We recommend an LED panel for continuous lighting or setting up a speed-light off camera works too!
